Maroon players look on while they waiting for turn in practice.

"Team Kaboom is a hardcore tune."

The maroon team is made up of a tight knit group of players. Something that mentor coach Peter Anderson is proud of about his players. They are a friendly group of boys who respect their coaches and team managers. The players do not just get along they are also hardworking.

The players have learnt to head to the net for screens and rebounds and they continue to work on it. Coach Anderson feels that the players need to hone their basic skills. These include shooting accuracy and playing as a team. The players need to also work on shooting for a purpose (getting a rebound, etc). They have to continue to work hard on their skating.

Like all other teams, the coaches have found a way to come together and make things work. Despite their differences in language and culture, the coaching and management staff get along well and have a lot of support for one another. That is what team Kaboom relies on to blow everyone else out of the water.
