

Unsung Heroes

If the goaltender is the “backbone” of a team then these guys are the camp. Often the forgotten people on any team, the equipment managers are some of the most respected people within the team. They spend countless hours doing thankless jobs and that often go unrecognized. Equipment managers are the ones that make sure that players and staff alike are taken care of so they can do their jobs. They make sure jerseys are clean and presentable, gloves are palmed and skates sharp enough to make the tightest turns.

Jason Ellery (GBR) and Tatu Vento (FIN) along with the individual team equipment trainers are the unsung heroes of the development camp. Both have worked on teams playing in some of the highest levels of hockey in the world and they have chosen to bring their professionalism and expertise to our camp. Before you leave you should shake the hands of these hardworking gentlemen.

As Jason likes to say “ Sounds like a plan”.

Teal players celebrating a goal.

“So far so good” is how the coaches for team Teal has the described the camp. The sTEALers has come together nicely because of good attitude. “It feels like they’ve been together for years”, says student coach Ross MacLean. This is due to the internal leadership if the team.

The strength of the sTEALers is its depth. Teal is also blessed with a solid core of defensemen which plays a two-way game and is good at moving the puck. The forwards are committed to doing the unheralded things like blocking shots and going into the “dirty” areas of the ice to get the puck. Most importantly, the players listen to the coaches and follow the game plan while playing as a unit.

The coaches are impressed with the improvement that the boys have shown over the week. Every player has put the practice times and coaching to good use. The goalies have gone through a change of style that can be described as a positive one.

All the coaches and staff have nothing but positive things to say about one another. They described themselves as a group that took a while to get to know each other but willing to put cultural and language barriers aside for the betterment of the team. They also describe Jim Hunt as an effective head coach. Teal has no slogan, perhaps they just want to let their actions do all the talking.
